

One of the first industries of Torrance

When Jared Sidney Torrance planned this model community in 1911, one of the first industries he invited here was a steel mill. Since 1930 it has been part of the United States Steel family. This, of course, is familiar history: The important thing is that, for nearly four decades now, Torrance people have been helping build the highways, bridges, schools and other buildings that have changed the face of Southern California. Steel is one of the first industries of Torrance in point of years. It strives also to be one of the first industries in contributing to the progress of this growing American community.
